

Fergus Bailey | Senior Consultant

Fergus is passionate about understanding how programs and policies affect real people. He applies the critical and creative thinking skills he developed in his university degree to find practical, feasible solutions that benefit clients and stakeholders.

He is an experienced interviewer and has engaged with a diverse range of stakeholders. His favourite part of his work is hearing from people who deliver programs and those who access them to understand what is most important to them and synthesise their experiences into useful recommendations for clients.

I love speaking to people and hearing what matters to them, then finding ways to efficiently produce positive, effective outcomes for everyone involved. It is a privilege to be doing important and complicated work with people who care.

Education:

- Bachelor of Arts, (Honours) (Philosophy), University of Sydney, 2022

Sector experience: Disability

Fergus is deeply passionate about access and inclusion for people with disability – a passion which he brings to all his work in the disability sector. He uses his strong critical thinking and stakeholder engagement skills to understand and analyse the complex systems that impact people with disability. Fergus' work in this sector ranges from managing evaluations of grant programs for not-for-profits to leading components of complex, system-level projects for government. He is highly skilled at interviewing people at all levels, from people with disability and carers to peak bodies and government representatives.
